Fiber optic networks represent a profound leap in communication technology, leveraging the transmission of data through light signals. At the heart of this system lies the fiber optic cable, a thin strand of glass or plastic, designed to carry digital information across vast distances with minimal. Fiber optic cables are high-tech communications cables that carry information like bursts of light along extremely thin glass or plastic strands, providing high-speed, high-bandwidth connectivity with little loss of signal. Fiber optic cables make up the foundation of contemporary. Total Cost of Ownership (TCO) is the sum of all costs associated with deploying, operating, and maintaining a fiber optic network over its operational lifespan — typically 20-25 years. While procurement decisions often focus on initial capital expenditure (CapEx), the reality is that lifecycle.
