

How much does a fiber optic distribution unit cost

Article Overview

Fiber optic distribution units typically cost between $200 and $2,000, depending on capacity, type, and installation requirements.

Cost Overview

A fiber optic distribution unit (FODU), also known as a fiber distribution hub or patch panel, is used to terminate, organize, and distribute fiber optic cables in a network. The cost varies based on several factors:

- Capacity and Size: Small indoor units for 12–24 fibers may cost around $200–$500, while larger outdoor or high-density units supporting 144–288 fibers can range from $1,000 to $2,000 or more.
- Type of Unit: Pre-terminated units with factory-installed connectors are more expensive than field-terminated units due to labor savings and reduced installation errors.
- Material and Environmental Rating: Outdoor-rated, weatherproof enclosures cost more than indoor units due to rugged construction and environmental protection.
- Installation Costs: Labor for mounting, splicing, and connecting fibers can add $100–$500 per unit, depending on complexity and location .

Additional Considerations

- Fiber Type: Single-mode fiber is generally less expensive per strand than multimo...
