

Price of temporary power distribution box scaffolding at construction sites

Article Overview

Temporary power distribution boxes for construction sites typically range from $200 to $1,500 for purchase, with rental options starting around $50 per day depending on capacity and features.

Purchase Prices

Temporary power distribution boxes, also known as spider boxes, are available in various configurations for construction sites. Basic 30A or 50A single-phase units suitable for small tools and lighting can cost $200-$500. More robust 100A or three-phase units designed for heavy-duty equipment may range from $800-$1,500. These units often include GFCI protection, weatherproof enclosures, and multiple receptacles, and are built to comply with NEC and OSHA standards.

Rental Prices

For temporary use, many contractors opt to rent power distribution boxes. Rental rates typically start at $50 per day for smaller units, with weekly or monthly rates available for longer projects. Larger or three-phase units may cost $150-$300 per day, depending on amperage and configuration. Rental providers like United Rentals offer a wide range of options, including prefabricated panels, spider panels, and transfer switches, which can be customized for specific jobsite needs.
